

Reflective practice enhances osteopathic clinical reasoning.

Research into clinical reasoning among healthcare professionals has been researched extensively. This research has identified that reflective practice is widely used. McIntyre et al., reported the findings of their study investigating reflective practice and its effect on clinical reasoning in osteopaths. They argue that reflective practice is a critical tool to support osteopathic practice: it triggers the questioning of clinical reasoning and can create changes in clinical practice. The abstract can be found here

https://www.journalofosteopathicmedicine.com/article/S1746-0689\(19\)30013-6/abstract30013-6/abstract).

The full text of the article* can be found in the International Journal of Osteopathic Medicine which is available through the O-zone on the GOsC website

<https://members.osteopathy.org.uk/home/>.

* McIntyre C, Lathlean J, Esteves JE. Reflective practice enhances osteopathic clinical reasoning. International Journal of Osteopathic Medicine 2019 June;32.